Government lawyers here assume that she would then continue to refuse to answer questions before the Federal grand jury in Seattle that has been questioning her for more than two weeks about the March 1

the law under which she was jailed this week.

Her prospects for release appeared to be strengthened yesterday when the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, in Chicago, acting in an unrelated case, declared the law unconstitutional. Miss Bacon, a 19-year-old antiwar activist, was imprisone Wednesday in Seattle for civil contempt of court after she rejected a grant of immunity is sued under the organized Crime Control Act of 1970.

Civil contempt proceedings pressure witnesses to testify by, in effect, "placing the keys to their cells in their own pockets." When they agree to talk, they are freed.

Pressure Would End
Thus if Miss Bacon were released on bail until the Supreme Court ruled on the law—a decision that is not expected beforeax winter—the pressure uponer to testify would be lifted.
