

The Adversaries

by Stuart H. Loory

.....

In December, 1970, a group of White House correspondents held a meeting fully revealed to their colleagues and to the White House to discuss ways of making Presidential press conferences more meaningful. Several days later, Herbert G. Klein, the Administration's communications director, attacked the group as a cabal against the President.

Mr. Klein's view was typical of the sinister motives the Administration has imputed to the press. Somehow Mr. Nixon and his Administration have come to view reporters as personal enemies.
