Hoover's Report On U.S. Violence

Washington

Mob violence on the Nation's streets and college campuses has decreased, but disorders in the public schools indicate continued racial discord, FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover said in congressional testimony released yesterday.

He also said there was "a mounting number of police killings" with an increase of assaults on policemen to a rate of 6000 a month. He said 126 officers were killed in 1971, compared to 100 in 1970.

Hoover's statements were made in his testimony March 2 to a House Appropriations subcommittee, which made public a censored version of his testimony.

The FBI chief said that overall there were 109 "incidents involving mob violence" in 1971, compared to 159 the previous year, and that there was a "general lessening of student activism" on college campuses. (His survey covered a period up to February 23, prior to the recent renewals of student anti-war demonstrations).

But he said "disorders in the nation's secondary schools continue to provide strong evidence that racial discord is far from being at an end."

At one point, Representative John J. Rooney (Dem-N.Y.), the subcommittee chairman, said. "You don't allow any gay (homosexual) activists in the FBI, do you?"

"We don't allow any type of activists in the FBI, gay or otherwise," said Hoover, adding: "Personal appearance excludes hippies. We permit no hippies in the bureau. I can guarantee that."
