JAN 1 9 19759261 6 I NAC Had Fil On Congress, Ex-Aides Say

By Ronald Kessler Washington Post Staff Writer

The Federal Bureau of Investigation, during J. Edgar Hoover's reign, compiled files containing information on the personal lives of senators and congressmen, two former high-ranking FBI officials have told The Washington Post.

Cartha D. DeLoach, assistant to Hoover until 1970, and Louis B. Nichols, who held the same position until 1957, said the files contained data on the girl friends and drinking problems of members of Congress as well as other personal information characterized by DeLoach as "junk."

Both men said the information, which was kept in the FBI's general files, was not gathered for purposes of political blackmail and did not result from direct surveillances of members of Congress unless they were targets of criminal investigations.

Rather, they said, the information was placed in congressmen's files after persons interviewed by the FBI on unrelated matters had volunteered it.

They said they knew of no instance when the information was leaked to the press.

Although the two long time FBI officials had no first-hand information of current FBI practices, a senior agent who asked that his name not be used said the bureau continues to collect such information.

"If I find a congressman has a girl stashed (in some city), I'd report it to the SAC (special agent in charge)," he DeLoach and Nichols said they could not estimate how DeLoach and Nichols said they could not estimate how many FBI files on members of Congress contained such information, since they had not breaking into houses, it would had seen information of a personal nature gathered by the wouldn't be in the report," he FBI on Sens. Mike Mansfield said.

(D-Mont.), Lowell P. Weicker Members of Congress have

The sources said that in one were widely acknowledged to instance, Hoover had ordered be a factor in Hoover's long derogatory information gath-tenure as director of the FBI.

See FBI, A6, Col. 1

FBI, From A1

former Rep. William R. Anderson (D-Tenn.) after Anderson had criticized him for his statements about the Berrigan brothers.

FBI spokesman James Murphy, asked if the FBI keeps such files, declined to com-ment, and a request for an in-terview with FBI Director Clarence M. Kelley was denied.

Murphy added, however, that derogatory information volunteered on anyone, includ-ing a member of Congress, would be recorded.

"If someone says this guy is an alcoholic and a frequenter of houses of prostitution, we would just report this charac-terization, including if it is a senator or congressman."

Murphy acknowledged that such information might not be recorded if it concerned a person not of intrest to the bureau. But if it involved a government employee or member of Congress, he said, it probably would be recorded.

Murphy declined to be questioned further.

A former high-ranking FBI official in charge of record keeping said that if agents recorded all the noncriminal allegations made against ordinary seen them all.

But another source said he wife of some guy is shacking had seen information of a per-up with someone, that

(D-Mont.), Lowell P. Weicker Members of Congress have Jr. (R-Conn.), Abraham A. Ri-long suspected, and periodibicoff (D-Conn.), George Mc-cally charged, that the FBI Govern (D-S.D.), Edward M. was compiling personal infor-Kennedy (D-Mass.), Adlai E. mation on them. Although the Stevenson III (D-Ill.), and charges were never proved, Reps, Carl Albert (D-Okla.), the suspicions, fed by rumors Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), and that Hoover supplied the inthe late Hale Boggs (D-La.). formation to the White House, ered on the personal life of Francis Biddle, a U.S. Attorney General in the 1940s, provided a glimpse of Hoover's knowledge when he described a luncheon conversation with the director:

"... he began to recipro-cate by sharing some of his extraordinary broad knowledge of the intimate details of what my associates in the Cabinet did and said, of their likes, their weaknesses, and their associations . . . I confess that within limits, I enjoyed hearing it. His reading of human nature was shrewd, if perhaps colored with the eye of an observer to whom the less admi-rable aspects of behavior were being constantly revealed."

Informed in general terms of The Post's findings, several members of Congress last week said the FBI's denial that it purposely gathers the information and does not use it for political blackmail is not relevant. The mere existence of such files, they said, represents a lever against Congress because it has the potential to be used for political blackmail.

"There's no point in its be-

FBT-TT

file 49 Jan 75

Beginning this date, clippings on investigation fo FBI by Congressional committees will be filed with CIA (domestic); that file will include investigations of CIA, FBI and other intelligence agencies ing there if they are not going to use it," said Sen. Gale W. McGee (D-Wyo.), a member of the Appropriations Committee, which has jurisdiction over the FBI's budget.

"Obviously it's to be in reserve for some kind of blackmail," McGee said. "The Gestapo operated that way too. They were just collecting records," he said.

Sen. Alan Cranston Calif.) said he cannot think of legitimate reason for ng such information. keeping such information.
"It's a threat even if it is just there and not leaked or gathered for blackmail," he said.

Calling the practice demeaning to the professional standards of the FBI, Sen. Mark O. Hatfield (R-Ore.), said, "It smacks more of political blackmail than of security or law enforcement activities, and it should be stopped as an infringement of the civil rights of individuals."

"I think the FBI has one function, and that's to enforce the law," said Sen. Walter F. Mondale (D-Minn.). "Maintaining unpublished." ing unevaluated materials on people who are not suspected of federal crimes is a danger-ous procedure. If it gets in the political arena, it can chill uninhibited political debate and activity," he said.

Calling the practice "outrageous," Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.) said the information gathering "goes to the heart of the separation of powers."

"I just don't believe it," said Sen. Howard W. Cannon (D-

"If the facts contained in The Post article are true," Sen. Kennedy said, "they indicate that the constitutional rights of members of the legis-lative branch have clearly been infringed by the executive branch.

"The article," he said, "is in direct conflict with testimony of the FBI before the Senate Judiciary Committee and calls into question the legality of FBI practices.

"The American people de-serve a full explanation of allegations of data collection on their elected representatives, and I call for a full investigation by the Constitutional Rights Subcommittee of these allegations," he said. Kennedy is a member of the subcommittee, which is part of the Judiciary Committee. He is also chairman of the Administrative Practices and Procedures Subcommittee, which investigates wiretapping and other invasions of privacy.

Kennedy and other senators recalled denials that such files existed by L. Patrick Gray III, who was named acting FBI director by President Nixon a day after Hoover's death.

In a widely publicized magazine interview, Gray declared shortly after taking office that he had looked and found no "evidence whatsoever of the existence of secret files or political dossiers."

When an Ohio FBI agent

CARTHA D. DeLOACH . . . tells of "junk"

was caught making inquiries at a local newspaper about a congressional candidate, Gray said four months later that the FBI had congressional files that are used to provide briefing material to agents who call on congressmen on FBI business FBI business.

These files, Gray said, contain only biographical information gathered from newspapers, campaign literature, and public reference books. Because the information gathering might be misinterpreted as a surveillance program, Gray said, he had ordered it stopped.

During subsequent Senate confirmation hearings on his nomination to be FBI director, Gray offered for the record a letter in which he denied that the FBI has any other pro-gram for gathering information on federal elected officials.

An attempt to find out if Gray was aware at the time that the FBI had files on co... gressmen's personal lives was unsuccessful.

When the subject of con-When the subject of congressional files was broached during a telephone interview, Gray said, "I have no comment now or ever. I'll ask your kind indulgence, and I'll just say goodnight." He then hung up as a reporter was talking talking.

John P. Mohr, an assistant to Hoover and briefly to Gray, said Gray asked him prior to his first public denial if the FBI had secret files on members of Congress.

Mohr said Gray had asked him the wrong question. The files containing information files containing information on the personal lives of members of Congress are secret to the public, but not to FBI personnel, he said.

"Old Gray was all spooked off," Mohr said. "He asked me if there were 'secret' files. I told him that was a bunch of crap." If he had asked if the FBI has files on congressmen, "I'd obviously have said yes," Mohr said.

In declining official comment on the files, FBI spokesman Murphy said last week the subject already had been discussed by Gray.

Describing the FBI's data collection methods, DeLoach said personal information gathered on members of Congression.

gathered on members of Congress was read by Hoover be-fore it was filed. The purpose, he said, was not so Hoover could blackmail congressmen but so he would have it for his "information."

"People would volunteer information during a regular investigation on other matters," DeLoach said. "There was never any investigation by the FBI to find out this junk. We never made any followup or disseminated it in any way. There was no federal violation of law involved, and consequently it was none of our business."

Although most of the infor-Although most of the information was volunteered by persons interviewed by the FBI, some data came from wiretaps, Nichols said. The taps were not on congressmen's phones but were on phones of persons with information about members of Conmation about members of Congress or persons who conversed with them, he said.

This situation is known in vides information on persons than outside it." other than the targets of the taps.

"I think the amount of information over wiretaps was de minimus," Nichols said.

Although Nichols and Deinformation on members of Congress not suspected of criminal activities, an in-formed source said Hoover had ordered derogatory material gathered on Rep. Anderson, who was defeated in 1972 after serving four terms.

The order was given after Anderson criticized Hoover larly for naming Daniel and Philip Berrigan as having plotted to kidnap a high government official, later revealed to be Henry A. Kissinger, the source Daniel Berrigan was not named in a subsequent indictment, and the charges against Hoover's personal correspondmissed when a trial ended in a hung jury.

In complying with Hoover's order, agents in Nashville office of the FBI first provided relatively inocuous information about Anderson, the source said.

But Hoover ordered them to titution had said she thought Anderson had visited her place of business several years earlier.

The purported identification was made from a photo the agents showed of Anderson, he added.

Hoover then wrote "whoremonger" in memoranda placed in the FBI's file on Anderson, and the claimed identification was reported to the Nixon White House, the Nixon Whisource said.

Before he was told the nature of the information gathered on him, Anderson said recently he had learned through a friend that FBI agents had asked a call girl if she had provided services to him.

The friend, who met the girl at a bar, quoted her as saying she had not met Anderson, the former congressman said.

He said he had not been involved in such activities.

'I was going to make a confrontation with the agents, but then I decided not to," said Anderson, saying there would be no point to such a move.

Such incidents were source of Hoover's power, Anderson said. "I knew half the office, which had no files. The Hill was scared to death of files, he said, were in Hoover because, as Lyndon rooms in Hoover's suite.

law enforcement parlance as Johnson said, he'd rather have an "overhear" because it pro- him pissing under the tent

> "The Martin Luther King story was well known," Anderson added. "They knew Hoover would go to every end to put you on the spot."

King was the target of FBI Loach said they knew of no leaks about his personal life in purposeful attempt to gather the 1960s, according to newsthe 1960s, according to newspaper editors who were approached by FBI personnel with the fruits of private life surveillances.

> Although most of the personal data on members of Congress was kept in the FBI's general files, few such files containing particusensitive information were kept in Hoover's office, Nichols said.

The purpose was to keep file clerks from browsing through them and telling their friends of the contents, Nichols said. He said they were filed alphabetically in ence records.

Mohr said Hoover's personal correspondence files were shredded on the day of his death by his personal secre-tary, Helen W. Gandy.

Mohr, who was assigned by then acting Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst to se-cure Hoover's office on the try again, the source said, and day of his death, said Miss this time they reported that the madam of a house of prosstroyed many of Hoover's files before his death as part of a program Hoover had ordered.

Mohr did not quote Miss Gandy as giving a reason for shredding the files, and she could not be reached for comment.

Asked about the whereabouts of Hoover's files, FBI spokesman Murphy said, "Mr. Hoover's personal effects and correspondence were collected by bureau personnel and ther destroyed or removed to his residence. Any official records maintain in Mr. Hoover's office were rea and appropriately filed." removed

Several days after Hoover's death, Miss Gandy gave particularly sensitive files occupying about 12 filing cabinet drawers to then acting FBI associate director W. Mark Felt, a source said.

It could not be learned with certainty whether any of these files were on members of Congress. Felt declined to comment.

Asked why he allowed Miss Gandy to shred the files, Mohr, who has since retired, said Kleindienst had only asin other