Ed, thanks much for the Johnston story on The Secret Team and Frouty and the CIA's interest in the book. My of-hand opinion is that if they really wanted to know if they decided to get them they'd not have been detected. Or, the CIA might have wanted them and didn't want to go to the parliaments, anyway. I have long had a question about Frouty in all of this: does he really know anything about CIA? In this interview he adds something to my knowledge about the Bay of Pigs. The account of the aviation school and the Cuban students who were in it by the CIA in Cuba was a story that the press could see it. Frouty has another question. App: you will come to your own conclusion. I have written the book because I wrote his account of the CIA because he has already published his Secret Service. Thanks, Ed
