A crackdown on crimes in the Times Square area by closed-circuit television is due to get under way next month, under plans being made by the police department.

The television eyes for Times Square and its side streets will be monitored from a police trailer in the area.

"I think every law-abiding person who comes to the Times Square area will be delighted to know he is being protected in this way," said Deputy Inspector James E. Dicks of the midtown South precinct. "Only criminals will be worried about being on this television screen."

Dicks said he did not know how many television eyes will be set up.

"We do know we will be able to have entire blocks under television watch," said the inspector.
