

8 June 1967

MRS. ALLILUYEVA DERIDED IN SOVIET

Moscow Paper Again Seeks to Deride Her

By RAYMOND H. ANDERSON
Special to The New York Times

MOSCOW, June 7 — A campaign of scorn and sarcasm has been undertaken here in an effort to discredit Svetlana Alliluyeva, Stalin's daughter, who is now in the United States. Literaturnaya Gazeta, the Soviet literary weekly, printed three articles today seeking to depict her as an untrustworthy and dishonorable defector, more interested in publicity and money than in her homeland and her children.

One of the articles posed three questions in retorting to an article by James Reston, an associate editor of The New York Times. The article was published by The Times May 22 under the headline "Mrs. Alliluyeva Depicts Pain of Exile."

Another of the articles in Literaturnaya Gazeta was reprinted from a French weekly, Nouveau Candide. The writer sought to link Mrs. Alliluyeva to the Central Intelligence Agency and derided her as a "product that must be sold."

Buchwald Piece Reprinted

The third article was a reprint of a column by Art Buchwald, in The New York Post, cautioning Mrs. Alliluyeva, tongue in cheek, about the perils of the high cost of living in the United States and chiding her for her plans to give book royalties to charity.

Mr. Reston's article was a commentary on an account by Mrs. Alliluyeva, who uses her mother's maiden name, about her "deepest feelings on leaving the Soviet Union." Mrs. Alliluyeva's article appears in the June issue of The Atlantic.

"The document is an expression of the old pre-Communist Russian spirit of belief in God, love of nature and compassion for the human condition everywhere," Mr. Reston wrote.

In its retort, Literaturnaya Gazeta declared:

"You will no doubt agree that traitors and defectors are far from the most respected people in this world."

The article, cryptically signed Valentin 008, scorned Mrs. Alliluyeva as a daughter who traded on the name of her father and as a mother who bartered her two children "for an automobile and a dog."

Mrs. Alliluyeva has been reported as mentioning a car and a dog as personal possessions she hopes to acquire with royalties from writings.

The reply to Mr. Reston, which opened familiarly with "Hello, James," preceded the three questions with this observation:

"Excuse me, but it seemed to me when I read your article about S. Alliluyeva that you had dipped your pen in an inkwell, deftly presented to you by some obvious illwisher, containing a stinking liquid instead of ink."

Valentin 008 posed the following questions to Mr. Reston:

"One, where did S. Alliluyeva get the money and by what means did she travel from India to Italy and then to Switzerland and, finally, to the United States?"

'Embarrassment' Noted

The writer said Mrs. Alliluyeva had been "embarrassed" when asked this question during her April 26 news conference in New York.

According to press reports, an officer of the Central Intelligence Agency, Robert F. Rayle, accompanied her to Italy and Switzerland after she had turned to the United States Embassy in New Delhi for asylum.

"Two, what do you think about the exhibitionist revelations of this lady, who, as noted correctly by the writer of a letter to Time, not only 'separated from three husbands but also deserted her two children' and, we add, betrayed her homeland?"

"Three, I also think that the American public will be obligated to you if you will inform them whether Svetlana will honestly pay taxes on the fabulous sums derived from her treason?"

According to press reports, $1.1-million has been paid for publication rights in the United States and $1.5-million in Western Europe. Mrs. Alliluyeva's lawyers are understood to have formed a corporation in Liechtenstein so that she will pay less taxes in the United States on income earned abroad.