Impeachment - Priscilla McMillan: "The unresolved residue of emotion Americans have about President Kennedy's death comes from the same deep psychological recesses as the emotions which are creating at least some of the doubts about impeaching President Nixon. In psychological terms, the Kennedy assassination and the Nixon impeachment are nothing more than paraphrases of each other. The phenomenon at the heart of each is parricide, the murder of the father by the son. Today it is we who are challenged to be the executioners."
