The Major Events of the Day

International

India, Pakistan and Bangladesh reached a major breakthrough and signed an agreement to repatriate 195 Pakistani prisoners of war. The war-crimes trial planned for the prisoners is to be dropped by Bangladesh. The pact opened the way for normal diplomatic and economic relations between the three nations and the easing of tensions and hostilities that followed the Bangladesh war in 1971. [1:5.]

A political controversy over real-estate deals involving associates of Prime Minister Wilson was entwined with the reported destruction of a crucial letter. The letter, which was written on Mr. Wilson's personal House of Commons stationery hearing what he has said was a forgery of his signature, prodded a property dealer to complete a real-estate transaction with Mrs. Marcia Williams, Mr. Wilson's secretary for 18 years, and members of her family. [1:2-3.]

National

The White House told the House Judiciary Committee that it needs more time to decide how to respond to its request for tape recordings of 42 Presidential conversations relating to Watergate. [1:8.]

The Democratic majority on the House Judiciary Committee has informally agreed to support limited participation by the President's counsel, James D. St. Clair, in the impeachment inquiry. Mr. St. Clair would be allowed to be an observer in sessions in which evidence on President Nixon's conduct in office is presented to the committee. If formally adopted by the committee, the proposal could prevent widening of the partisan rift that has been developing as Democrats and Republicans debated the President's right of representation. [1:6-7.]

The Senate, breaking an 11-day filibuster, voted 64 to 30—one more than the required two-thirds — to close debate on a major campaign reform bill that would use public funds to finance Presidential and Congressional elections starting in 1976. The vote appeared to insure the eventual passage of a public campaign financing bill by the Senate. [1:6-7.]

Judge Lee P. Gaiglandi of Federal District Court in New York made two rulings that apparently damaged the defense of John N. Mitchell and Maurice H. Stans in their criminal
