The Major Events of the Day

International

The Central Committee of Israel's dominant Labor party cleared the way for the selection of a candidate to succeed Premier Golda Meir, who resigned April 11. After four hours of raucous debate, the committee defeated proposals for immediate new elections and voted by a 2-to-1 margin to authorize a candidate to attempt to form a new coalition government. [1:8.]

Egypt decided to cease relying on the Soviet Union for all her modern arms because Moscow had used the supply of weapons and ammunition as an "instrument of policy leverage," seeking to influence Egyptian actions. This action was unacceptable, President Anwar el-Sadat said in an interview with C. L. Sulzberger of The New York Times. [1:6-7.]

Senator Edward F. Kennedy tried out American-style public opinion polling on an audience at Moscow State University and drew some hostility when he asked for a show of hands on whether the Soviet Union should be spending more or less on defense. All but a few in the audience declined to indicate an opinion until Mr. Kennedy and a Russian translator rephrased the question. Then the hall almost unanimously raised their hands in favor of the present level of defense spending. [1:3-4.]

Early returns in Colombia's first free presidential election in more than two decades gave the Liberal candidate, Alfonso López Michelsen, a 60-year-old law professor, a strong lead. The election marked the end of the constitutional pact under which Liberals and Conservatives had alternated the presidency since 1958. [1:5.]

National

Economic instability and increasing pressure from Democratic leaders for a tax cut will add to the problems President Nixon will face when Congress returns from the Easter recess tomorrow. Following reports of the highest rate of inflation since 1951 and a decline in the gross national product, Senator Hubert H. Humphrey joined other influential Senate Democrats in proposing a tax reduction. [1:1.]

For millions of Americans, the ending of more than 32 months of wage and price controls next week is expected to bring another spasm of price increases that will further

CORRECTION

The New York Times reported in Saturday's editions that Gov. John A. Burns of Hawaii had "stepped down because of illness." Mr. Burns continues to hold the post of Governor, but the duties of the office are being performed by Lieut. Gov. George Ariyoshi, who has the title of Acting Governor.
