

The Major Events of the Day

International

The United States has begun discussions with the new leadership on Cyprus but Washington insists that no decision has been made on diplomatic recognition. High American officials indicated the Nixon Administration was leaning toward Nikos Giorgiades Sampson rather than President Makarios, who was overthrown in the military coup that Mr. Sampson led. [1:8.]

Archbishop Makarios and Premier Bulent Ecevit of Turkey conferred separately in London with Prime Minister Harold Wilson and Foreign Secretary James Callaghan, trying to work out a common approach to reverse the Cyprus coup. Britain is reluctant to use more than diplomatic pressure on Greece. Word that the United States is dropping Archbishop Makarios adds another complication. [1:6-7.]

Turkey took no decisive action in the Cyprus situation, in response to American and British requests. Government spokesmen expressed satisfaction with Britain's quick response to Turkey's call for consultation, but some informants said Turkey was disappointed at British reluctance to undertake joint military action. [1:6:3.]

Most of the diplomats calling at the Foreign Ministry in Athens urged respect for an independent Cyprus and for the constitutional procedures under which Archbishop Makarios was elected President. Privately, however, their feeling was that the coup that overthrew him had succeeded despite the Archbishop's escape from Cyprus. [1:6:6.]

More than 40 tourists were injured and one of them was killed by a time bomb in a cellar armory of the Tower of London. There was no advance warning and no claim of responsibility for the attack. A major tourist attraction was apparently chosen for maximum emotional impact. [1:3.]

West Germany approved acquisition by the Iranian Government of a one-fourth interest in the steelmaking subsidiary of the giant Krupp enterprise. It was the largest move yet of an oil producing state to invest in Western industry. [1:4.]

CORRECTION

An article in The New York Times Tuesday incorrectly reported a State Court of Appeals decision dealing with children "in need of supervision." The court ruled that children who were beyond or without parental control could be placed in state training schools provided they received appropriate training and supervision. The court upheld an earlier decision that prohibited these nondelinquent children from being confined in the same institutions that house youths convicted of crimes.
