The Major Events of the Day

International

Administration officials said that President Ford and Secretary of State Kissinger ordered various Government agencies late last week to stop lobbying for a new foreign aid bill, in an effort to block amendments that would restrict Presidential freedom of action in foreign affairs. Rather than trying for a new bill, the officials said, the Administration sought to extend foreign-aid spending by means of a continuing resolution based on last year's legislation. [1:8.]

Mexico has reportedly been asked unofficially if she would give asylum to political prisoners held by the Dominican Republic whose release has been demanded by leftist guerrillas holding six hostages in the Venezuelan consulate in Santo Domingo. The guerrillas have indicated that they will leave the country peacefully if the 37 political prisoners are allowed to leave with them. [1:6-7.]

Two days of talks by the finance ministers of the United States, Japan, West Germany, Britain and France ended in Washington with no indication that they had agreed on action to meet the problems caused by rising oil prices. It was reported unofficially that the ministers had decided this was no time to act on the issue of oil prices, but all agreed that a lower price was a crucial long-term goal. [1:5.]

More than 10,000 people in Moscow flocked to the biggest officially sanctioned show of modern and unorthodox art by Soviet painters since the avant-garde movement of the nineteen-twenties. They were five, six and even 10 deep in a huge field to get a glimpse of 200 paintings displayed by about 65 artists. There were no incidents of violent disruption and repression by authorities. [1:1-4.]

National

A senior White House official said that President Ford dismissed as a "conversational gambit" an offer two weeks ago by former President Nixon to relinquish his unconditional pardon. The official, commenting on a report in Time magazine that Mr. Nixon had offered to "return" the pardon and that Mr. Ford had declined, said the account was "an essentially accurate" version of a telephone conversation the former President had initiated on Sept. 17.

The Other News

International

The news magazine said Mr. Nixon told Mr. Ford that he regretted the "trouble" the pardon had caused. [1:6-7.]

The disclosure of a quietly arranged trans-Pacific shipment to Japan of stripped Montana coal has touched off an angry new wave of opposition by Montana ranchers to the state's impending coal boom. There was no announcement—efforts were made to keep it "private"—of a shipment last August of 10,000 tons of coal from a cattle-grazing region. [1:7-8.]

The Watergate conspiracy cover-up will go to trial tomorrow morning, two years and three months after the cover-up began and nearly two months after it caused the final collapse of the Nixon Presidency. There will be either five or six defendants, depending on how Federal Judge John J. Sirica rules on a pending motion. Among them are John N. Mitchell, the former Attorney General, and H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman, who had been chief White House assistants. [2:51-8.]

Metropolitan

Detectives who had played the role of fences for several months held a party for alleged thieves in a Queens warehouse Saturday night. But before refreshments could be served, the 42 surprised guests were arrested and charged with the theft of $700,000 in property. Eight more were arrested later at their homes and arrest warrants were issued for 130 more. [1:1-2.]

Two men who, the police said, tried to rob a card game in a private home in Queens were shot dead. Their bodies, trussed up in canvas wrappings, were discovered at the bottom of an embankment of the Long Island Rail Road's Jamaica storage yard. The slain men, both cabbies and identified as Jerry Gaines of Flushing and Paul Moore of Bayside had arrest records. [1:3.]

Forty detectives canvassed apartments, bars, hotels and restaurants along and near West 79th Street searching for details which could shed light on the murder and dismemberment of Police Officer Patrick J. Kelly. One line of the investigation is centering on homosexual bars and gathering places in the upper West Side. The Medical Examiner's Office hopes to establish some time today the time of the officer's death. The dismembered body was found early Saturday on West 79th Street. [1:1-2.]
