The Major Events of the Day

International

Premier Jose Pinheiro de Azevedo of Portugal told his people that the nation's economic plight made austerity inevitable. In a broadcast address, he denounced what he termed "intemperate and sterile political discussions" and said the Portuguese people "must produce more and consume less." [Page 1, Column 1.]

With returns almost complete, the opposition Republican People's party in Turkey scored gains in midterm parliamentary elections. Since the Government failed to win a clear mandate, it appeared doubtful whether it would make unpopular decisions on such issues as Cyprus. [3-5-8.]

National

A House subcommittee, its chairman said, has begun an inquiry into the F.B.I.'s relationship with Lee Harvey Oswald and Jack Ruby before President Kennedy's assassination. Representative Don Edwards of California, the panel's chairman, said that the investigation "is not to reopen the Warren Commission" findings "but to set the record straight on just what went on." This is the first public Congressional inquiry into whether evidence was withheld from the commission since its report was issued in 1964. [1:6-7.]

Attorney General Edward H. Levi disclosed that he had appointed a special committee in the Justice Department to develop means to coordinate and consider ways to improve law-enforcement efforts against white-collar crime. [1:2.]

The General Accounting Office reported that the Federal Government spent $2.6-billion last year to employ 169,625 persons for police, investigative and intelligence-gathering activities in 33 agencies. The cost totaled more than 8 per cent of Federal outlays and did not include expenses for the C.I.A., the National Security Agency or the Pentagon's intelligence branches. [2:4-2:4.]

Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama, arriving in London to begin his first European tour, was accorded a correct and complete reception. Governor Wallace, expected to announce another bid for the Democratic Presidential nomination soon, got a briefing on diplomatic problems from the American Ambassador, had a meeting with Prime Minister Harold Wilson and plenty of exposure, via TV, to curious Britons. [1:5-8.]
