The Major Events of the Day

International

The Senate Select Committee on Intelligence charged that the United States ended a 10-year, $13.4 million effort to deny President Salvador Allende Gossens power in Chile by "advocating and encouraging the overthrow of a democratically elected government." The Committee said, however, it had found no direct involvement by the Central Intelligence Agency or the United States diplomatic mission in the 1973 coup against the Allende Government. President Ford and Chinese leaders ended their four-day meeting in Peking yesterday after reaching an apparent understanding on their mutual interest in countering an expansion of Soviet influence in Western Europe, Angola and the Pacific, but there was no substantive change in Chinese-American relations. [1:2.]

New questions about possible violations by the Soviet Union of the 1972 treaty limiting strategic arms have been raised by American intelligence reports to the Ford Administration that a large radar station was recently built on the Kamchatka Peninsula in the northeastern Soviet Union. The equipment reportedly consists of very modern "phased-array radars" for use in testing systems of defensive weapons known as antiballistic missiles. [1:5.]

The United Nations Security Council invited the Palestine Liberation Organization to participate in a debate on the recent Israeli raids in Lebanese territory. The Council, departing from its standing rules, according to the P.L.O. a role similar to that of a United Nations member state. [1:3-4.]

National

The House approved by a vote of 257 to 168, legislation modifying and continuing through next year $13 billion in tax reductions for individuals and businesses that were enacted last spring as a temporary antirecession measure. The House defeated by a vote of 220 to 202, an attempt by Republicans to tie the tax-reduction extension to enactment of a $395 billion Federal spending ceiling for the coming fiscal year, as demanded by President Ford. [1:8.]

A Federal investigator testified in Federal District Court in Detroit that a witness had identified three New Jersey men, connected with the Teamsters Union and the underworld, as having participated "in the abduction and murder of James R. Hoffa." The witness was Robert Ozer head of the United State Organized Crime Strike Force in Detroit. [1:1.]

A panel of experts reported to the Food and Drug Administration that none of the most common active ingredients in non-prescription sedatives and sleep aids may be termed fully safe and effective for their advertised uses. [1:2.]

Because of a decline in volatile agricultural prices, the Wholesale Price Index for November remained unchanged from October, the Labor Department said. Prices continued to rise in the important sector of industrial goods, but the increase of six tenths of 1 percent was only half as large as in October. [1:8.]

Metropolitan

Mayor Beame announced the dismissals of 500 city employees—many of them political appointees from the city's Democratic clubhouses—in what he called the $6.3 million first step in the city's over-all effort to "reduce $200 million from the existing budget." He did not explain at his news conference how he intended to cut the remaining $193.7 million from the budget. He also announced that he had formally ordered the dismantling of three of the city superagencies established by former Mayor John V. Lindsay—the Housing Development Administration, the Economic Development Administration, and the Municipal Services Administration. The agencies will be reorganized into smaller departments. [1:6-7.]

The State Liquor Authority announced a statewide ban on total nudity in places that sell alcoholic beverages and canceled the liquor license of the Village Gate in Greenwich Village on the ground that its production of the musical "Let My People Come," which has nude performers, was "lewd and indecent." "We feel that the sale of liquor and total nudity are incompatible," said Michael Roth, the liquor authority's chairman. [1:7.]

The city's public schools will begin charging tuition in February to 3,000 children from other countries, including the children of foreign businessmen working here, who do not have immigration status or are permanent residents. The foreign pupils will be charged an annual amount equivalent to the cost of their education in the city schools. [1:6.]
