

The Major Events of the Day

International

The three commanders of Argentina's armed forces took office in Buenos Aires as a governing junta 10 hours after overthrowing and arresting President Isabel Martinez de Peron. The only resistance was a brief shooting incident at a union headquarters. Numerous Peronist union leaders and political figures were being arrested. Mrs. Peron, who refused to resign under military pressure, was flown to a provincial resort. The immediate reaction of workers, most of whom are Peronists, was calm and noncommittal. Washington reporters are being told that even if a new agreement with the Soviet Union limiting strategic arms is reached this year, it is more and more possible that Leonid I. Brezhnev will not come to the United States to sign it. The Ford Administration has reportedly reached this conclusion because of the strains in Soviet-American relations over Angola. [1:4.]

Israel complained to the United States in Washington over the criticism of Israeli policy in occupied territories voiced in the United Nations Security Council by William W. Scranton, the American delegate. Mr. Scranton called Israeli settlements in Arab territory an obstacle to peace. The State Department said his remarks on this and the annexation of East Jerusalem were similar to those made by three predecessors. [1:3.]

Tax-fraud charges against Sweden's famous film director, Ingmar Bergman, were dropped by the public prosecutor's office in Stockholm as lacking any basis for further investigation. His sudden arrest had been followed by what the director's friends called a nervous breakdown, and friends say they have never seen him so listless. [1:8.]

National

President Ford called for a nationwide campaign to vaccinate everyone who wants it against a new influenza virus to forestall epidemics next fall and winter. He said he would ask a $135 million appropriation to provide the vaccine. The vaccination effort would be the largest ever attempted in this country, involving public health forces at every level and private groups. [1:1-2.]

The Supreme Court ruled that blacks who were denied jobs in violation of the 1964 Civil Rights Act must be awarded seniority
