

The Major Events of the Day

International
 Egypt and the leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organization are reported to have reached a broad understanding for cooperation in Lebanon and elsewhere ending nine months of bitterly strained relations. The main purpose, according to sources close to Yasir Arafat, the P.L.O. leader, is to strengthen his hand against what they call "a Syrian attempt to bring the Palestinian resistance movement in Lebanon under the control of Damascus." Informed Arab officials said that Saudi Arabia, which has been mediating other Arab quarrels, helped smooth the Egyptian-P.L.O. relationship. [Page 1, Column 1.]

Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer and the head of the Trades Union Congress agreed on a tough new wage-control policy. Their unusual alliance has been tightened by a common anxiety over the fall of the pound and the continuing high inflation rate. The agreement restricts wage increases to 4.5 percent in the year starting Aug. 1 and sets a maximum increase of $7.32 for those earning more than $150 a week. [1:2.]

National

President Ford ordered a major review of his campaign strategy following four straight primary losses to Ronald Reagan. Proposals reportedly under consideration included dropping the public question-and-answer sessions that often put him on the defensive, and an attempt to picture his challenger as a dangerous reactionary who could not be elected. As the Republican race narrowed, Jimmy Carter took a longer lead in the Democratic contest, with his strategists predicting a pre-convention delegate count big enough to win. [1:7-8.]

A growing split between the conservative and moderate wings of the Republican Party is indicated in The New York Times/CBS News survey of voters in the Indiana Republican primary. Despite previous warnings of this danger from President Ford's backers including Senator Barry Goldwater, the voters overwhelmingly rejected the idea that Mr. Reagan was splitting the party. But their own views showed a deep split along ideological lines. [1:7.]

The Senate failed by three votes to override President Ford's veto of a $125 million bill on child day care that would have helped the centers to meet long-unenforced staffing and safety standards. Many centers are now in danger of closing. Senator Russell B. Long, the Finance Committee chairman, said that a compromise bill would be sought in a few days. [1:6.]

The stock certificates controlling the Summa Corporation, which holds title to most of the $1.5 billion estate of Howard Hughes, were in the possession of the Bank of America at his death last month. This was disclosed in a court action in which a Hughes cousin, William Lummis, was appointed ancillary administrator of the estate. [1:1.]

Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr. of West Virginia and his former top aide were acquitted by a Federal jury in Charleston of conspiring to extort $25,000 from a businessman who was seeking a state bank charter. [1:2.]

 Celebrities in some Manhattan apartment houses are taking their turn at chores such as removing the garbage and running the elevators during the building employees' strike. Negotiators for the union and the owners agreed to meet today to try to end their stalemate after a conference with Mayor Beame. [1:5.]

Governor Carey has asked the city's Board of Higher Education to approve a plan for the traditionally tuition-free City University including the same tuition charges as at the State University, according to a spokesman for the Governor. At City College, approximately 1,000 marched in protest from the campus on 138th Street to 125th Street. Mr. Carey's plan reportedly includes additional state aid. [1:5.]

The Englehard Minerals and Chemicals Corporation, a multinational marketer of industrial raw materials, announced plans for a major expansion of its headquarters here. While some major companies are moving their headquarters to the suburbs, its president told stockholders of the advantages it enjoyed in "this global center for international trade." [1:7-8.]

The New Jersey Superior Court ordered 11 Middlesex County communities to make plans immediately for low- and moderate-income housing by 1985, striking down their zoning ordinances as unconstitutional. The ruling rested on a case involving zoning in Mount Laurel, N. J., which the United States Supreme Court let stand. Judge David B. Furman said the 11 should provide their fair share of regional needs. [1:3-4.]

Quotation of the Day

"We are convinced that this city will continue to provide the best environment for our type of business."
 —Milton F. Rosenthal, president of the Englehard Minerals and Chemicals Corporation, announcing a planned expansion of its New York headquarters. [1:7.]

CORRECTIONS

In an article on the Texas primary election that appeared in The Times on Monday, it was erroneously reported that Representative Bob Eckhardt had been defeated in a contest for delegate to the Democratic National Convention. Mr. Eckhardt was not a candidate for delegate; his wife, Nadine, lost a delegate race.

It was incorrectly reported in The Times Tuesday that the Convent of the Sacred Heart is the oldest school in New York City. Trinity School is the oldest.
