International

President Carter, in the General Assembly of the United Nations, asserted that the organization had allowed "its human rights machinery to be ignored and sometimes politicized." He said: "There is much that can be done to strengthen it," and suggested that the United Nations Commission on Human Rights meet more often and that it move from Geneva to New York. The President touched on a number of other subjects in his speech, which was also intended to emphasize his Administration's support for the United Nations. [Page 1, Column 6.]

Zaire's major copper mining center of Kolwezi was captured by rebel forces from Angola, according to informed sources in Kinshasa, who said the troops met little opposition from Zaire's soldiers and were welcomed as liberators by the local population. The invading forces, who were reported to have also taken the trading center of Sandoa, were believed to be veterans of the former Katanga army who took refuge in Angola when their secessionist rebellion led by the late Moise Tshombe collapsed in 1965. The $50 tax rebate, the keystone of the Administration's economic stimulus program, was in effect approved by the Senate Finance Committee when it narrowly rejected two Republican amendments offering permanent tax cuts instead. A proposal by Senator William Roth of Delaware was turned back by 9 to 8. Another by Senator John C. Danforth of Missouri that would cut taxes to 14 percent on the first $18,000 of income failed 10 to 8. The tax bill is expected to reach the Senate floor later this month. The House has passed the rebate. [A1:3.]

President Carter both before and after his election said he intended to consider the cost of a new Government agency regulation before putting it into effect. So, the Administration's top economic policy team has agreed to establish an elaborate new review system aimed at forcing agencies such as the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and the Environmental Protection Agency to project the costs of major regulations before they are issued. The proposal is opposed by some top Federal officials. [A1:3-5.]

Employment quotas can and do work in reversing patterns of job discrimination, Joseph A. Califano Jr., Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, said in an interview. He said that his experience in the practice of law and in recruiting policy makers for his department indicated that it was possible and necessary to endorse preferential hirings for jobs and admissions policies in higher education. Legislative leaders in Albany have set the date for the statewide primary this year on Sept. 8, with a run-off election to follow, if necessary, in New York City on Sept. 19. The schedule is contained in a bill that will be offered to the Legislature for approval next week. [A1:1.]

Mayor Beame ordered New York City officials to take four major sports organizations to court to prevent the Jets from playing their first two home games this season in the Giants Stadium in the Hackensack Meadowlands in New Jersey. The Jets announced Wednesday that they would play the first two games in New Jersey and then return to Shea Stadium—their home since 1964—for the remaining five games. The city, under the Mayor's order, will sue the Mets, the Jets, the National Football League and the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, which operates the Giants Stadium. [A1:2.]

Business/Finance

The aggregate income of Americans was at a record high last month and the figures helped reinforce other Government statistics indicating that the economy appears to be recovering strongly from its mid-winter troubles. The Commerce Department said personal income grew at a seasonally adjusted rate of $17.1 billion, or 1.2 percent, to an annual rate of $1,458 billion. [D1:5-6.]

Stock prices declined slightly after five days of gains and the Dow Jones industrial average dipped 3.16 points to 964.84. It had gained nearly 25 points during the week. Only five of the Dow's 30 components showed increases, and they were all measured in fractions. [D1:1-2.]

Under threat of dismissal from their employer, striking toolworkers at British Leyland, Britain's largest auto manufacturer voted to return to work. The company was expected to resume operations Monday. The toolworkers had sought a pay differential that would distinguish them from nonskilled workers and they wanted separate negotiating rights. The dismissal threat that ended the futile strike had the full backing of the Government, which owns virtually all of Leyland's stock, and the major unions whose leaders have supported the Government's wage-curb program. [D1:6.]

Genesco Inc., will give an aggregate remuneration of $431,667 over a 28-month period to Franklin M. Jarman, who was ousted by the board of directors as chief executive officer of the largest apparel maker and retailer in the country. Mr. Jarman was allowed to remain as chairman, but he will resign that post Aug. 1. For each of the following 28 months he will be paid $15,416. During that period Genesco will also pay his dues at the University Club in New York and provide him with a 1977 Continental automobile. Mr. Jarman had been earning $285,000 a year when his ouster was voted. [D1:4.]

Industry data will be presented to the National Association of Securities Dealers today indicating that it would be economically feasible for the association to carry out its plan for trading call options on 11 over-the-counter July 5. [D1:1-2.]
