

TIMES has a long story. It is flawed by factual error and is rehash except for the allegation that Kalmbach told the FBI he was authorized to spend up to $300,000 on such "security" operations as Segretti. What I am copying from the current issue is something the Post has eschewed and NBC (with Douglas Kicker) did very well night before last. They juxtaposed Ziegler, film and sound, with Gray, Ziegler nay-saying what Gray admitted. And, of course, a fair sampling of his attacks on the Post. It was as effective as it was obvious and called for. That this is all I have seen in print is sufficient commentary, no? I don't think a journalism-school paper would have avoided so obvious a thing and wonder why the Post has. It is not enough if the assumption many readers will remember is correct.
