

Happy Holidays

NEW YORK — This week's big news — the Watergate scandal and the ever-worsening situation in Southeast Asia — are both breaking so fast and furiously at this writing that each must have changed in important details by the time you read this.

You certainly already know how and why the dam went bust at Watergate — and what had been held in still is spilling out all over the front pages. Meanwhile the only sure observation that can be made about Indochina right now is that nobody ever ceased firing, that matters are bad, getting worse, and that the American people wish the whole place would get lost.

Because both of the week's top stories are in such a state of flux at my deadline — and because I don't want to waste your time or mine with something contrived in this joint season of Easter and Passover — I have decided to get lost myself today as far as this space is concerned.

So, in the spirit of the two holidays, herewith my very warm best wishes to all of you on this springtime Sunday. See you here next weekend!
