Honor

Editor — Our President in the Watergate mess has admitted making some mistakes. I'm sure he wants the electorate to forgive him, but when he faces the problem of amnesty for the boys whose conscience wouldn't let them fight and chose exile, the President does not show any compassion.

History will honor these boys equally as much as the prisoners of war.

Editor — The Watergate affair sheds additional light on the Administration's position for our conscientious objectors in exile. What understanding can our young exiles expect from a President who has shown so graphically that he doesn't know men of conscience and moral principles when he sees them.
