Nixon Plans A Worship Service Again

Washington

President Nixon will hold his first worship service at the White House in six months on Sunday, October 7.

A congressman-minister will preside at the East Room service. But the White House did not announce his name immediately.

Mr. Nixon last held a worship service at the White House April 15. That was the 40th such service since he inaugurated the service early in his administration.

There have been repeated inquiries to the White House about Mr. Nixon's lack of churchgoing in recent months.

The chief executive last attended church on Easter Sunday in Key Biscayne, Fla.
