

Advice for Republicans

Seattle

Republican National Chairman George Bush said yesterday that those who believe President Nixon no longer is a political asset to GOP candidates will be proved wrong.

"Those trying to write off the President as a political asset a year from now are premature," Bush said at the Western states Republican conference.

The GOP chairman said the distraction of the Watergate scandal is fading and, "people are coming to recognize that this President does have a fine record."

United Press
