

Tower Urges Full Pursuit
Of 'Trail' of Watergate

Senator John G. Towers, Republican of Texas, a supporter of President Nixon's policies, said Tuesday night that the Watergate "trail" should be followed "wherever it leads—even into the Oval Office," The Associated Press reported.

Senator Tower said the renewed Watergate prosecution should be headed by someone whose "objectivity" was above reproach and who would not enter the investigation "with the cards stacked against" the President.

William D. Ruckelshaus, who resigned as Deputy Attorney General instead of discharging special prosecutor Archibald Cox, said he agreed the new prosecutor should be "clearly objective in fact and appearance" and said he himself would therefore fail to qualify.
