

What Nixon revealed about his finances

Highlights of President Nixon's financial disclosures:

SCRUTINY: He tells Congress he'd welcome it looking into his tax returns and says he'll accept a decision by a committee controlled by Democrats as to whether he declared too much in deductions. If they say he did, he'll pay up. Page 1.

GETTING RICH: He's become a millionaire in the White House, and while he's been there his net worth has tripled, thanks to some smart land deals, some help from his friends and the canniness of his tax men. Page 12.

BENEFACTORS: He's Elmer Bobst, whose millions come from pharmaceuticals. He set up a trust fund valued at about $25,000 for Tricia Nixon. A White House spokesman said Bobst is sort of Tricia's godfather. Page 13.

THE PAYMASTER: Herbert Kalmbach, the Newport Beach lawyer who paid the bills in the Watergate affair, is still paying Nixon's bills. Page 14.

THOSE TAXES: On an income of $1.6 million, Nixon has paid taxes at a rate of

—AP Photo

Rose Mary Woods, the president's personal secretary, and Gerald Warren, a White House press secretary, chat at a Washington ball Friday night. Yesterday it was revealed she made a financial windfall through stock options. Story on Page 13.

4.7 percent since he's been in the White House. Page 15.

CHARITY: His biggest gift was to Billy Graham, but in 1972 the President listed he gave only $295, even though he had an income that year of $268,777. Page 15.