

Nixon to Give

Hill Longer

Message

President Nixon will send Congress a lengthier State of the Union message than the one he plans to deliver in person before a joint session of Congress at 9 p.m. Wednesday, the White House announced yesterday.

The longer written statement "will cover all aspects of domestic policy," deputy press secretary Gerald L. Warren said.

Mr. Nixon's address, which will be carried by all television and radio networks, will be the first he has delivered before a joint session since June 1, 1972 on his return from a trip to the Soviet Union, Iran, Poland and Austria.

He sent his State of the Union message to Congress last year in writing. The President appeared but did not speak at a joint session Dec. 6 when Gerald R. Ford was sworn in as Vice President.

Mr. Nixon continued to work on his message yesterday at Camp David, where he spent the weekend. Raymond K. Price, who has helped Mr. Nixon on nearly all his major speeches, was at Camp David with him.

Warren said that the annual economic report would be sent to Congress Friday and that the 1975 budget, expected to exceed $300 billion for the first time, would be submitted Monday.
