"Over 250 guests attended the service, including the Irish ambassador, John Molloy, who presented Mr. Nixon with the traditional shamrocks and a gift of Irish prints for Mrs. Nixon."

Just 'Plain Flu'

First Lady Pat Nixon, who returned late Saturday night from an exhausting trip to Eatin America, woke up on St. Patrick's Day with what ther husband called "plain flu."

So Mrs. Nixon missed the White House worship service yesterday morning, including a sermon delivered by famed preacher and Nixon family friend Dr. Norman incent Peale. After the service, the choir, the Motet Singers of Louisville, Ky., went into the front hall, furned their faces toward the upstairs and gave a loud fendition of "Happy Birthday." (Mrs. Nixon, who turned 62 March 16, celebrates fer "official" birthday on St. Patrick's Day.) "I'm sure she heard that," joked the President. "If she was asleep, she's not now."

More than 250 guests attended the service, including the Irish ambassador, John Molloy, who presented Mr. Nixon with the tradition. al shamrocks and a gift of Irish prints for Mrs. Nixon Irish prints for Mrs. Nixon.

Another guest was Rep.
Robert J. Lagomarsino, newly elected congressman from Ventura, Calif., in the heart of Nixon country. He is the only Republican to have won a seat in the four special elections in the post-Watergate era. Though he judged sentiment in his home district to be running about 50-50 on the question of impeachment, Lagomarsino said he personally would vote in favor "if there is an impeachable offense."