

Agnew Cleans Out His Desk

The former Vice President, Spiro T. Agnew, has moved out of his Government office just a block from the White House, his papers have been sent to the University of Maryland library, and his franking privilege has come to an end.

Mr. Agnew's 600 boxes of papers and memorabilia, which he specified may not be open to the public until 1977, when his term would have ended had he not resigned after pleading no contest to a tax-evasion charge, were delivered to the university Wednesday.

The "extraordinary gift" of the papers, said Wilson H. Elkins, president of the university, "will be of substantial benefit to scholars and others interested in the period covered by the documents."

The closing of the Agnew office, in a Government-owned mansion, appeared to sever Mr. Agnew's last ties with his former office. His forwarding address was given as his home in suburbay Maryland.

in Melbourne, Australia, where she was competing as a member of the Czechoslovak discus-throwing team and he won the Gold Medal in the hammer throw. They fell in love, but the Czechoslovak government at first opposed their marriage, and their plight became a cause célèbre. Finally, the authorities relented, and the Connallys were married in Prague in March, 1957.

Now, however, the romance is over, the marriage ended. In Santa Monica, Calif., the Connallys were granted a divorce on the ground of irreconcilable differences. Previously, a judge had had to issue a court order restraining them from "molesting, harassing, annoying, striking, threatening or arguing with one another."

The Federal Bar Council, whose 2,000 members are Federal judges and lawyers practicing in the Federal courts in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Vermont, will present its annual still a citizen of Czechoslovakia. I am being deprived of citizenship of my country by a regime that is not the regime of an independent state but the organ of a foreign power."

In what is probably one of the most ironic footnotes on the Watergate affair, Senator Lowell P. Weicker Jr., the Republican from Connecticut who has been one of the most vocal members of the Senate Select Watergate Committee, is negotiating to buy John W. Dean 3d's home in Alexandria, Va. He is only one of several bidders, dickering for the trim townhouse in that popular Washington suburb, according to well-placed sources close to Mr. Dean. The property is just a few houses down the street from the one in which Mr. Weicker now lives.
