

The White House is planning to turn another batch of evidence over to the House Judiciary Committee. I'm Douglas Edwards, reporting on the CBS Radio Network.

Presidential counselor Dean Burch appeared before the Republican National Committee in Washington and delivered the news.

Burch [voice]: Early next week, when the President responds to the committee subpoena, a massive body of evidence will supplant charges and allegations and innuendo. And out of this factual record the whole story will emerge and the whole truth become known. That body of evidence will be substantial, it will be relevant, and it will be compelling and persuasive. I genuinely believe, beginning early next week, that the end of Watergate will be in sight.

CBS: Earlier, GOP national chairman George Bush told the committee he's convinced that President Nixon is telling the truth about his involvement in Watergate.
