can University graduating class, Connecticut Sen. Lowell Weicker said yesterday he has been "hard-nosed" about Watergate because he is "not Watergate because he is "not America cannot stand," he "Concervot ... Sirica, who has presided at Watergate related court proceedings encouraged the prospective afformers to "get in there and fight We have too many spectators in this countrical contents." Speaking before an Amerihistory, piled into mounds, and burned."

Weicker, a Republican member of the Senate Watergate Committee, told the graduates of AU's College of Public Affairs that the "greatest dan-indifference and failures of ger" of Watergate is that the man in the street to play "conceived in an ignorant apathy his proper role and meet his thy of the electorate, executed in semiconscious anathy.

Weicker has been one of the Watergate committee's more outspoken members and one of the committee's harshest critics of the White House.

Little of what Weicker told those attending the commencement exercises at the Washington Hebrew Congregation Temple, at Massachusetts Avenue and Macomb Street NW, was new, but the audience didn't seem to mind.

"I am deeply concerned that with Watergate not even concluded, the American people in their anticipation of some new scandal, or in their preoccupation with the guilt or innocence of individuals, are forgetting matters of overriding importance that have been made known, are indisputable fact and which could overwhelm a democracy," Weicker warned.

"Specifically, I refer to the fact of those institutions of government that have been smeared and defaced, almost beyond recognition by a hand-ful of constitutional delinquents. What took 200 years to build nearly came down in the quest for four more (years)," duest for four more (years)," he told the applauding audience.

At the temple earlier in the day, U.S. District Judge John Sirica told graduates of the AU College of Law, "The faults of governments the weicker made only the most oblique of references to the current rumors concerning an alleged impending presidential resignation; and he did not call for, or endorse, the impeachment of Richard Nixon.

Instead he said, "Obviously, I can't agree with those who would go outside the Constitution to determine the guilt or innocence of the President of the United States I say that the emotions of At least let's not have our generation enter the Watergate That's what it was all about from the beginning, for more than any individual's guilt or innocence. Rather, let's do what it is we have to do. if anything, within the laws."

he nation "will live with or without a new fact of scan-dal, said Weicker, "with or without convictions. The type of matter it cannot survive is the law enforcment, intelli-gence capability of government politically used as an in-cumbent's edge."

The senator then went on to
