Nixon's Leg

Still Swollen

By Phlebitis

Yalta, USSR

President Nixon still has some swelling in his left leg from a phlebitis attack and his doctors are encouraging him to get as much exercise as possible, the President's aides said yesterday.

Mr. Nixon is feeling no pain, aides said, but doctors feel long hours of riding in automobiles and airplanes may worsen the blood clot condition.

Mr. Nixon is unconcerned and in no danger, aides added.
