Honest Mayor Refuses Mafia Bribe

By Jack Anderson

All politicians shouldn't be tarnished by the misdeeds of a few power-hungry men who flaunted the law while they basked in the sunshine of Key Biscayne and San Clemente.

The stories should be written, too, of the honorable politicians men like the courageous, small-town mayor who turned down a $500,000 bribe and risked the wrath of the Mafia rather than compromise his integrity.

His name, Burt Ross, deserves a big headline.

The 31-year-old mayor of Fort Lee, N.J., in the heart of Mafia country, allegedly was offered $500,000 to help obtain zoning variances for a multimilliondollar commercial complex.

Ross reported the bribe offer to the FBI, which asked him to go ahead with the arrangements but to wear a hidden listening

On May 26, he met two local developers at the Paramus restaurant. One of them pushed a thick, manila envelope across the table at him. It was stuffed with $100,000 in small bills, the. first of five installments-more money than the young mayor had ever seen.

Outside in the parking lot, the FBI was tuned. in. The two developers were subpoenaed and indicted five days later for conspiracy to commit bribery

But the drama was only beginning. Ross received a phone call press the prosecution of their Haldeman. "Leak out certain at his home the morning of May White House superiors. 31 from Joseph Diaco, one of the two men at the restaurant rendezvous.

grand jury subpoena, and he threatened the mayor's life. It Watergate case. was not a threat to be taken lightly because Diaco, according to official records, is on close terms with the Mafia family of Ruggiero (Ritchie the Boot) Boiardo.

The FBI placed Ross and his wife Laurie under protective living expenses and legal fees. custody. The mayor now runs his town in exile, moving from place to place with a troop of month offer. The payments to federal bodyguards. He keeps the defendants, we reported, in touch with his associates, "were funneled through (E. family and friends by telephone Howard) Hunt." only, his whereabouts known

Fort Lee, N.J., pay their mayor for this kind of honest service? He turned down a $500,000 tigation by confining it behind bribe, all in untraceable cash, the closed doors of the grand for a $5,000-a-year salary.

Footnote: Mayor Burt Ross our brass ring, good for one free ride on the questions. Washington Merry-Go-Round. Our stor

We had the same suspicion during the early Watergate developments. But our investiga-Allegedly, he growled meantion has now established that ingly that he had just received a the Silbert team deserves most of the credit for cracking the

> It is true, as we repeatedly warned before the January, 1973, trial of the Watergate Seven, that the White House was trying to buy their silence. In return for pleading guilty and keeping silent, they were paid

This was supplemented on the eve of the trial with a $1,000-a-

The White House strategy was only to the feds. to convene a grand jury to What do the good citizens of preempt the Senate Watergate hearings. The President hoped to control and contain the invesjury. This would also provide an We're awarding excuse for the White House to refuse comment on Watergate

Our stories about the Presi-The Silbert Story-The chief dent's strategy have now been of the original Watergate prose-confirmed by the White House cution team, Earl J. Silbert, is transcripts. These also show under fire on Capitol Hill for his handling of the case. that the President planned to leak self-serving information Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr. (D-N.C.) from the secret grand jury prois suspicious that Silbert con-centrated on convicting the Watergate burglars and didn't his former staff chief, H. R.

stuff. We could pretty much control that."

Instead. we obtained the grand jury transcripts and put out the straight story, upsetting the White House strategy

But it was the original Watergate prosecutors, more than anyone else, who thwarted the White House cover-up. After wiretapper James McCord gave them their first break, the prosecutors immediately hauled the tight-lipped G. Gordon Liddy back before the grand jury.

Although Liddy told them nothing, they deliberately kept him in the grand jury room and gave the impression he might be talking. Afterwards, the press surged around the emerging prosecutors to find out what Liddy had said. They responded with a sly "no comment," which was calculated to unnerve Lidsuperiors in the White House.

The ploy worked, and John Dean contacted the prosecutors to make a deal. They pumped him for information during latenight sessions in the Rockville, Md., offices of his attorney. Then they broke down Magruder, who had lied during the earlier trial.

In the end, the Silbert team broke the back of the case and left a 90-page summary that has served as a blueprint for the special prosecutors who succeeded them.
° 1974, United Feature Syndicate