U.S. Agency Rehires Santarelli

A Federal crime-fighting agency, the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, has quietly rehired its former chief, Donald Santarelli, who resigned earlier this year after criticizing President Nixon's handling of the Watergate scandal.

Federal officials said in Washington yesterday that Mr. Santarelli had been authorized to work from Aug. 29 to Nov. 28 as a "special Government employe" at $135 a day, but his duties remained something of a mystery.

Mr. Santarelli told an Associated Press interviewer that he was working "as a general consultant" on "projects that were begun under my regime," but declined to say just what he was doing.

Mr. Santarelli left his $40,000-a-year post as head of the agency on June 1. Mr. Nixon accepted the resignation but asked him to stay in office until he was replaced, which happened Sept. 5, when Richard W. Velde was sworn in. As of yesterday, however, Mr. Santarelli was still working in his old office.

The President of the Philippines, Ferdinand E. Marcos, may be moving eastward in his family diplomacy. That is suggested by dispatches from Peking reporting that Mr. Marcos's wife, Imelda, a former beauty queen, is to start an eight-day visit to China today.

Mrs. Marcos, who is 45 years old, has been designated her husband's "special representative," and is to discuss the establishment of diplomatic relations between Manila and Peking.

In an equally critical vein, Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr., the historian, said President Ford should dismiss Secretary of State Kissinger and all other Cabinet members appointed by President Nixon.

Dr. Kissinger "seems to be much more patient with America's enemies than with its friends," Mr. Schlesinger said in an address to students at California State University in Long Beach. To succeed Dr. Kissinger, he suggested that Mr. Ford name William W. Scranton, the former Pennsylvania Governor, and Mr. Schlesinger decried the pardoning of Mr. Nixon as the "ultimate cover-up."

Capt. Robin Quigley, the first woman to hold a major Navy command, said yesterday that she had decided to return to civilian life after 20 years. Captain Quigley, who is 44 years old and has been commanding the Navy's that her husband, John N. Mitchell, and everyone else who had fallen afoul of the law through the Watergate scandals should be pardoned—with one notable exception. Asked at London Airport whether President Nixon deserved a pardon, she said, "No—are you kidding? Why should he be pardoned?"

In New York, meanwhile, lawyers for Mrs. Mitchell and her husband, the former Attorney General, said they were close to reaching a settlement of a suit for separation that Mrs. Mitchell filed this year in Manhattan Supreme Court, asking funds for support and maintenance.

An assurance of no cover-up in the Chappaquiddick affair was made by Senator Edward M. Kennedy while in Hobart, Ind., for a $100-a-plate Democratic fund-raising dinner.

The Massachusetts Democrat said that if he decided to run for President he would answer any questions raised about Chappaquiddick, promising to "respond to questions and do the best I could."

Speaking of the drowning of Mary Jo Kopechne when a car the Senator was driving went off a bridge on the island, he said: "I have indicated it was a very deep personal tragedy. I have accepted full responsibility for it and full regret for the incident."

Andrew Knight, the 34-year-old assistant editor in charge of The Economist's Brussels office, was named editor of the British weekly, succeeding Alastair Burnet, who had earlier become editor of the mass-circulation Daily Express . . . Charlotte Curtis, an associate editor of The New York Times, was designated the winner of the Distinguished Achievement Award in Newspaper Journalism from the University of Southern California School of Journalism and its alumni association. The award is to be presented Nov. 7.

Service Center Command in San Diego, said she had no job lined up for after she retires next month, but said, "It's a big world out there and there are very many things to do."

Another old salt, Adm. Elmo R. Zumwalt Jr., has found a new job ashore, however. The retired former Chief of Naval Operations has been named visiting professor at Vanderbilt University, it was announced yesterday. He is to lecture in the departments of history, political science and philosophy.
