Personalities

Charles Colson, White House counsel under President Richard Nixon, told the St. Paul, Minn. Christian Businessmen's Committee that the office of the presidency separates a man from God more than any other thing in America.

Colson, who served seven months in prison, said he now makes a living "speaking, writing and doing the Lord's work."

He also said that former President Nixon has both good and bad points and needs "a lot of prayers and understanding."
