Man is curiously ambivalent about his environment. At once a nature-lover and nature-hater.

In his sophisticated, dazzlingly perceptive book, Paul Shepard looks through our eyes (human as opposed to those of the fish or the fly) at everything in the world - from 18th-century gardens and 19th-century Gothic ruins to 20th-century paintings and parking lots. And, having discovered what we see, he tells us what we are.
