

Jackie Tells Her Masked Fright

NEW YORK — (AP) — Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis has testified that composed, smiling photographs of her taken by free-lance photographer Ronald Galella often depicted a face "masking alarm and fright."

Testifying for a second time today, she said she did not know if her husband, Greek shipping magnate Aristotle Onassis, would appear at the trial. Galella's attorneys have been trying to subpoena him.

"I would try not to let those emotions appear on my face," the widow of President John F. Kennedy said yesterday during two hours on the witness stand in federal court.

Dressed in a simple suit of fringed black wool, Mrs. Onassis appeared composed as she told the court she had become "terrified . . . frightened and distressed" on many occasions by Galella's persistent efforts to photograph her and her children.

Mrs. Onassis is a defendant in a $1.3 million suit by Galella, who charges that she and Secret Service agents who guard her have interfered with his livelihood.

Mrs. Onassis, claiming

Galella has pursued her relentlessly and invaded her privacy, seeks a permanent injunction against harassment by the photographer.

All charges and countercharges are being heard in a juryless trial before Judge Irving Ben Cooper.

Before Mrs. Onassis' testimony, her lawyer, Simon Rifkind, told the court that Galella has made her a virtual "prisoner within her own home" on Fifth Avenue. He charged that Galella has followed by Mrs. Onassis around the world, romanced her maids and even paid teen-agers to spy on her.

Alfred S. Julien, lawyer for Galella, said Mrs. Onassis' statements that she was terrified by the photographer were "grossly exaggerated" and added that she was a highly desirable photographic subject.

Questioned about one occasion when she was waiting at Kennedy Airport for her children, John, 11, and Caroline, 14, to arrive, she said she was "distressed by the presence of Mr. Galella."

Shown a photograph taken during the incident and asked if she appeared to be alarmed, Mrs. Onassis replied, "It could be a picture of somebody masking alarm and fright."
