HE NEW YORK TIMES, TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1970

Antiwar Vietnam Veterans Finish 4-Day March

Special to The New York Times

VALLEY FORGE, Pa., Sept. 7 —Chanting "What do you want?" and answering "Peace now," more than 100 veterans of the war in Vietnam arrived here today after a four-day from of the Washington Memorial Chapel at the state park here and walked slowly on the wide expanse of the park's here and park's

here and park's
here and walked slowly on the
wide expanse of the park's
here and walked slowly on the
wide expanse of the park's
here and walked slowly on the
wide expanse of the park's
here and walked slowly on the
wide expanse of the park's
here and walked slowly on the wide peace a chance."

of marchers moved past, the possing veterans exchanged in them several black body bags war atrocities in Vietnam.

by More Than 100 Seeking sprawled on the freshly mowed grass were young persons. End to U.S. Involvement

Their chants were answered by a growing chorus from the crowd below shouting "Stop the war, stop the war."

Their chants were answered by Friday morning outside Morris-eight battle stars in the South Pacific in World War II, held a sign that said "Only the menbattle incidents that portrayed tally depraved want peace at battle incidents that portrayed tally depraved want peace at The marchers carried with alleged American brutality and any price."

Rally Is Held at Valley Forge in the crowd this afternoon, most of the audience that Earlier, as the column moved into the park after marching under a bright sun from its march and led 1,500 other peo- outside the 43,419 men killed in campsite north of here, a small American military withdrawal from South Vietnam.

The marchers, with weary muscles and blistered feet, chant "All we are saying is formed a battle skirmish line in front of the Washington Me
The marchers with weary and the audience joined in the formed a battle skirmish line in front of the Washington Me The rally which was a campsite north of here, a small group of veterans supporting American military policy in verged on the rally site, they Vietnam established a counterdemonstration across the street from the chapel. As the line of marchers moved past, the them several black body bags was attocked in vision that counted in white lettering Although other veterans were carrying a Confederate flag, shouted "traitor" and "coward" as the marchers went by.

Among the speakers at the rally were Representative Allard K. Lowenstein, Democrat of Nassau County; Donald Sutherland, the actor; Jane Fonda, the actress; Mark Lane, the civil rights and antiwar lawyer and Charles Bevel, a leader of a black group from Baltimore, which is marching to the United Nations to protest alleged American genocide in South Vietnam.

The rally ended when the marchers smashed the toy submachines guns they had carried for the last four days.