DALLAS, Tex., Feb. 16 (AP)- A handwritten document, forgotten for 16 years, was filed for probate yesterday -- the last will and testament of Jack Ruby.

Ruby died of cancer Jan. 3 in Parkland Hospital. The will, discovered by Dallas lawyer Jules F. Mayer as he cleaned his garage, makes Ruby's two sisters and a nephew, Ronald Magid, the recipients of the estate.

There had been no previous indication that Ruby had prepared a will before he stepped from a crowd in the basement of the Dallas City Jail Nov. 24, 1963, and shot Lee Harvey Oswald.

Mayer said he and his wife had handled Ruby's nightclub interests for 10 years and were in a Galveston motel in August, 1950, when Ruby knocked on their door at 3 a.m. and was taken in for the night.

Mayer said Ruby wrote his will the next day. "I'm sure he didn't have death in mind," Mayer said. "It was just one of those things we had been discussing."

The document left one-half of the Ruby estate to Mrs. Eileen Kaminsky, a sister in Chicago, and one-fourth to Mrs. Eva Grant of Dallas, another sister. The rest of the estate went to a trust fund for Magid.

Earl Ruby of Detroit, Jack Ruby's brother, has filed in a Wayne County, Michigan probate court asking to administer the estate without a will. The newly found document will void that attempt, if it is allowed.

The document found by Mayer was signed Aug. 23, 1950 and named Mayer as executor. It named Mrs. Kaminsky as the trustee for the portion left to Magid, who was to get the money at age 22. Magid's present age or address is not now known.

The value of Ruby's estate is not known.

Mayer said he was going through old files "preparatory to burning or destroying them" when he found the will.
