Roland Sawyer, a G.A.O. spokesman, was quoted as says spokesman, was quoted as saying the agency always believed it had the authority to conduct an investigation into F.B.I. activities, but the late bureau director, J. Edgar Hoover, "just wouldn't approve it."

"And without the cooperation of the agency involved, there's no way we can conduct a proper investigation," Mr. Sawyer said.

Mr. Hoover died on May 1,

1972, and the G.A.O. investigation was approved after a series of meetings with new director, Clarence M. Kelley, The
