The Prosecutors: Good Guy, Bad Guy, Chief

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 2-Seymour Glanzer plays the bad guy, grilling the witness relentlessly. Donald Campbell plays lous man. His mother says the good guy, gently coaxing the that even the heels of his sohes witness. Earl Silbert, the chief, must be lined up perfectly in moderates.

The three men, chosen from 148 assistant United States Attorneys in this city, are the prosecutors in the Watergate Case. For 10 months they have tried to wheedle the facts from scores of witnesses in their office at the Court House and before the grand jury.

leather chair in front of the leather chan in front cluttered desk. Mr. Silbert sits ups. behind it, leaning back in his black leather chair. Mr. Glanblack leather chair. Mr. Glanzer, his leg shaking anxiously, perches on a corner of the desk, only a foot away from dent's former counsel, he might desk, only a foot away from not be able to build a case for day last week, before recent slouches quietly in a corner, twirling his silver ball-point Haldeman and John D. Ehrlich- Everybody!" pen, waiting to catch the witness in a lie.

The formula is the same for all the witnesses-from the close-mouthed former spy, G. immunity, it could make Silbert laugh and shake their Gordon Liddy, to the frightened it more difficult to win a conheads as they watch Mr. Glansecretary for the Republican viction against Mr. Dean. committee, Sally Harmonyeven to the prosecutors' former cutor's severest critics, accuses Rounds of testimony," said chief, once the top law en-Mr. Silbert of bending to the Mr. Glazner, his blue eyes flash-

The prosecution's search to said:

3 Divergent Personalities

The prosecutors, who have his supporters too. Exclaimed been under attack from Congress, prominent lawyers and "This is a trial, not an ineven Chief Judge John J. Sirica quest." for their handling of the case, are three divergent personali-graduate of the Harvard Law room without the handcuffs ever a witness gives us a date

As the principal assistant United States attorney, Mr. Silbert is aiming for the maximum number of convictions. Thus this case. They come at you he has so far refused to "take the risk," as he put it, of There's no way you can satisfy Mr. Glanzer's passion for a conviction of the put it, of the risk," as he put it, of the risk of the put it, of the risk of the put it, of the p The witness sits in a blue ather chair in front of the witness of the site of the witness of the site of the witness of the site of the witness of the witne

For example, if Mr. Silbert and exaggeration. does not grant immunity to "There's no evi chief Presidential aides, H. R. stroyed. Then everybody lies. man, who resigned this week.

A lawyer, one of the prose-John N. Mitchell, the former House. The lawyer, who does not want his identity known,

But the chief prosecutor has

In many ways Mr. Silbert, a ties whose professional back-School, who has held on to his ready," one of his friends obgrounds are somewhat similar. White button-down shirts and serves. Criminal law is their passion. black loafers, is a textbook law-now their appetities for catching crooks is insatiable.

Mr. Silbert, a 37-year-old weekend athlete is a meticular meticular role of prosecutor he has been someone," said a colleague in known to help defense lawyers the United States attorney's of when he thought their clients fice. were not guilty.

Of the criticism, he says: "Naturally, I don't like it.

is always spiced with humor, witness. Mr. Campbell indictments against the two disclosures. "It's all been de- rats in grocery stores, and the

Mr. Glanzer's Brooklyn accent dominates the room as he Another Difficulty

And if he does grant such "lying." Mr. Campbell and Mr. Silbert laugh and shake their zer unleash his enthusiasm.

"We call them rounds now. White ing and his arms waving.

Strategy Described

"When we call in a new witin the Watergate case has taken them into the White House, to President Nixon's most trusted advisers.

2 Divergent Personalities

"He's willing to let Cubans to let learned about bugging while a member of the board don't get the truth till the third to skip bell learned about bugging while a member of the board don't get the truth till the third to skip bell learned about bugging while a member of the board don't get the truth till the third to skip bell learned about bugging while a member of the board don't get the truth till the third to skip bell learned about bugging while a member of the board to let the truth till the third to skip bell learned about bugging while a member of the board to let the truth till the third to skip bell learned about bugging while a member of the board to let the truth till the third to skip bell learned about bugging while a member of the board to let the truth till the third to skip bell learned about bugging while a member of the board to let the truth till the third the th

At 46, Mr. Glanzer is the oldest member of the team, bell with a reputation as a "buzz saw" when interrogating a wit-

"He's very careful to wait went on." None of them plotted his course yer with a streak of idealism, until he has an airtight case to the prosecutor's office but Despite his assignment to the before he comes down on

Mr. Glanzer is said to have The criticism wears on Mr. prepared his case so well must be lined up perfectly in the closet. His affinity for the did manage however, to play precise has generated most of the prosecution on his amateur hockey team izing about $4-million intosections winter. Edward Bennett Williams, the defense lawyer, took one look nailing crooks is mre evident tthan that of the two other

In the height of the Watergate investigation - the bigges —Mr. Glanzer stopped in the Unitd States attorney's office to talk about a case involving case to get sugar out of dietetic giner ale, to protect diabetics, which he won.

Laughter and Ginger Ale's

"People are being murdered and shooting each other," said Mr. Glanzer, laughing, "and I'm sitting in my office surrounded by cartons of giner

Donald Campbell, a deceptively mild man with a freckled face and red mustache, is the expert on bugging on the prosecution team. While in the

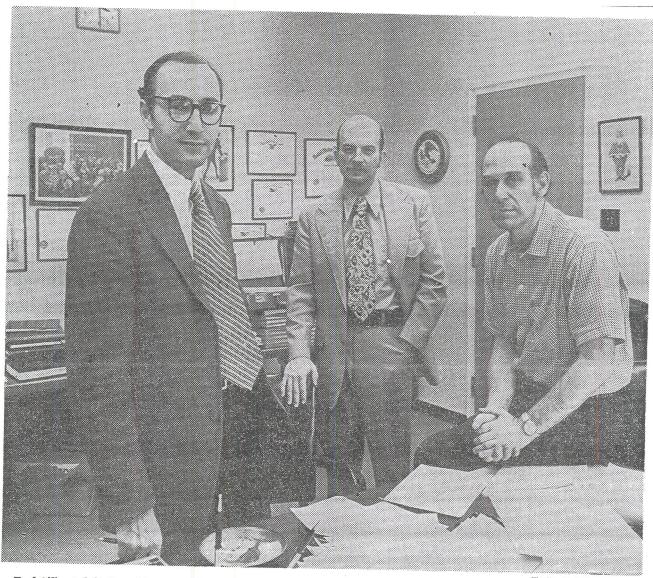

The 35-year old Mr. Campbell, devised the system for keeping tabs on the events in aw" when interrogating a wit-ess.

"I keep calendars in front of me," he explained. "Whenway to keep track of what

> Mr. Campbell's trick for gighting the mounting pressures in the Watergate case is to go home and work in his yard.

Mr. Glanzer doesn't need to let off steam; he thrives on it, taking phone calls from nagging reporters until early hours of the morning — a chore the other prosecutors must endure,

Mr. Silbert chuckles, when asked how he relaxes, and says, "I take a lot of tranquilizers."

Earl Silbert, left, Donald Campbell, center, and Seymour Glanzer, prosecutors in Watergate case in Washington