

The probable and certain crimes committed on all levels will never be completely catalogued, as only a small percentage can be expected to be charged. There are so many, it becomes impossible for the writer to enumerate them. Most will necessarily be ignored by all of us. Among the less visible is the question of whether Nixon was an accessory in the Ellsberg bag job because he finally was told of it, whether or not he had earlier knowledge, and did not report it for prosecution. Along with this are questions of obstructing justice and malicious prosecution. Once Nixon knew of this crime in his behalf and interest, whether or not at his behest, and that was, at the very latest, in mid-March 1973, he and all his minions who remained silent and did what they could to withhold from the Los Angeles federal court the evidence they all had, had the obligation to inform that court. Non did.
