Freidin's reports strongly should butter up Meany personally. The crusty labor lord suffered from a "bruised ego," wrote Freidin. "Meany wants to cause he prefers the older limbargain with or talk directly to ousine. the President. This came through loud and clear at least half a dozen times in our conversation."

Freidin quoted Meany as grumping: "How the hell do you cooperate (with the White House) if you can't talk to the team manager, only to his assistant coaches?"

Freidin urged on Jan. 11, 1972, that Meany wanted "to somehow patch things up with the President and at the same time, save face ... He said of the box of cigars the President sent him as a Christmas gift: 'It was very thoughtful. I wish that he'd also had the time to call and say

In other words, it seems Meany would dearly love to have a call from the President inquiring into his health."

Eventually the call came.
