

I have spent two hours this a.m. looking for a single apt quote from L. Patirock the Gray. I think it is in his 8/7/73 testimony. DO NOT spend time retrieving it, but if you do remember having it and can find it without wasting time searching, it would be helpful. One-Land's Times story does not quote it fully. It has the "Aye, Aye" in the headline. What Gray actually said is, approx., that saying "Aye, aye" is his greatest ambition. What more than blind obedience, and it is not precisely identical, may help make the incomprehensible comprehensible. There is an eerie, unreal quality to his words. They can't, really, be believed.
