

MAR 12 1970

THE NEW YORK TIMES

original filed Secret Service

INTRUDERS FOUND AT NIXON HOMES

WASHINGTON, March 11 (AP)—The Secret Service today announced that it had discovered intruders at the homes of President Richard Nixon and his family in San Clemente, Calif., and in the White House.

The Secret Service said that the intruders were found at the San Clemente home on March 10 and at the White House on March 11.

The Secret Service said that the intruders were found in the San Clemente home at approximately 10:30 p.m. on March 10. The intruders were found in the living room and the dining room.

The Secret Service said that the intruders were found in the White House on March 11. The intruders were found in the living room and the dining room.

The Secret Service said that the intruders were found in the San Clemente home at approximately 10:30 p.m. on March 10. The intruders were found in the living room and the dining room.

The Secret Service said that the intruders were found in the White House on March 11. The intruders were found in the living room and the dining room.

Congress for a new law giving more protection for visiting foreign dignitaries, but it is not likely that Mr. Nixon will ask that the Secret Service be authorized to protect visiting foreign visitors other than Ministers and Ambassadors.

Rowley told the subcommittee he feared someone might be able to gain access to the San Clemente compounds, which he says is a "very tight perimeter" and "very well guarded" in the past. He said he had contact with some of the people who had detected these people "accidentally." Mr. Rowley said he did not elaborate, and the subcommittee said he could not discuss the intruders in a confidential memorandum.

The probability of an attack upon the personal safety of the President is always present, and always especially so because of the current climate of unrest, protest and domestic violence existing in the country.

Mr. Rowley said the Secret Service system of relying on local policemen to control crowds worked "in a quiet way," he said.

But he said to other Secret Service agents who told them they could not enter estates while the President was visiting. Mr. Rowley commented, "but now when we ask them to move on they ask us what is our authority to deny them entrance."