grand jury. The jury has been investigating government corruption for more than a year.

The request for the delay came from Attorney General John N. Mitchell, who said in Washington that the Criminal Division of the Justice Department was reviewing the case.

Last week the deputy foreman of the special grand jury and the outgoing United States Attorney for Maryland criticized Mr. Mitchell for refusing to authorize an indictment based on the panel's investigation.

The deputy foreman said that Mr. Mitchell "has so far refused to authorize [the United States Attorney] to sign the indictment we believe to be lappropriate."

Later Stephen H. Sachs, who has since left office as United States Attorney, said he strongly agreed with the recommendations of the grand jury. But Mr. Sachs, who is a Democrat, said that it would have been "an act of irresponsibility" to sign the indictment "against the expressed orders of the Attorneysed orders of the Attorneysed orders of the Attorneysed orders of the Attorneysed orders."

The contractor on the job was Baltimore Contractors, Inc., whose chief executive officer is Victor Frankil.

The grand jury is also known to have investigated possible Mr. Sachs, who is a Democrat, said that it would have been "an act of irresponsibility" to sign the indictment "against the expressed orders of the Attorlay denied any wrongdoing in connection with the project."
