Coast Guard Aide Critical on Defector

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8 (AP)
—The chief counsel of the United States Coast Guard told a House comittee today that a Soviet ship captain's allegation that a would-be Soviet defector had stolen 3,000 rubles ($3,333) was no ground for returning him to the Russians.

The commandant of the Coast Guard, Adm. C. R. Bend, said Simas Kudirka's efforts to avoid being returned were so fierce that at one point he was thought to be in the vater and a Coast Guard cutter pulled away from the Soviet ship for fear of crushing him.

Admiral Bender said he recived only the same informatited:

dmiral Bender said he recived only the same informatited:

that the State Department didicing about the Nov. 23 incident that the State Department didicing about the Nov. 23 incident that the State Department didicing about the Nov. 23 incident that the State Department didicing about the Nov. 23 incident that the State Department didicing about the Nov. 23 incident that the State Department didicing about the Nov. 23 incident that the defection might take place and a second message ar 7:45 P.M. that the defector is being returned at this time."

Admiral Bender said he presumed were so fierce that at one point he was thought to be in the vater and a Soviet skip for fear of crushing him.

Admiral Bender said he presumed were so fierce that at one point he was at a message are arry in the afternoon that a defection might take place and a second message at 7:45 P.M. that the defector was being returned at this fime."

Admiral Bender said he presumed were so fierce that a defection might take place and a second message arry in the afternoon that a defection might are presumed that meant the defector was being returned at this fime."

Admiral Bender said he presumed were so fierce that at one point he was a proved where so fierce that a defection might are presumed were so fierce that at one point he was a point of the sound have been to keep the defector was being returned.

The mere allegation would be to committed."

The mere allegation would be to