his measure as "an unreasonable intrusion into state and local government activities." The fact that the Administration had reversed itself on the question of "intrusion," Mr. Jacobs said, suggested that it wished to gain political profit from the concern generated by the recent shootings.

The gun control issue arose during the Mitchell briefing. Although some legislators have cited recent police killings in Washington and New York to suggest stronger controls on the sale of handguns, Mr. Mitchell insisted that legislation enacted

The 1968 legislation prohibits the mail-order purchase of firearms, but many gun control proponents—including Commissioner Murphy and Mr. Tamm—have advocated a ban on all sales of handguns for private use.

Statistics published by the Justice Department, some of these proponents say, offer 67 of which were handguns.

As for the composition of the group that met with the President, the White House press secretary, Ronald L. Ziegler, said that the list had been put together by Mr. Hoover, the director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, at Mr. Nixon's request and that it was a "representaive" body of law enforcement officials.

White House officials also pointed out that, despite the omission of the head of the leargest police force in the country, Mr. Murphy, and the executive director of the police chief's association, Mr. Tamm, the list included several big-city chiefs of police—including Jerry V. Wilson of Washington and Edward M. Davis of Los Angeles—and the president of the geles—and the president of the association, John L. Shryock.

Mr. Murphy, former head of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, is a protégé of former Attorney General Ramsay Clark, whose opposition to Mr. Hoover has been widely publicized.

Mr. Mitchell, who described the two-hour meeting, said that Mr. Nixon had reassured his guests of the prompt availability of the resources of the F.B.I. in cases involving police killings. He also said that Mr. Hoover had arranged for a two-day seminar in Washington next week for more than 100 police officials.

In response, spokesmen for the group of officials said they were encouraged by the meeting and grateful for the President's expressions of concern.

Murphy 'Shocked' at White House Snub

Police Commissioner Patrick V. Murphy yesterday called the exclusion of a New York City representative from a White House conference on the killing of policemen "simply incredible" and said he could not imagine the decision was an oversight.

Seven policemen have been killed in the line of duty here this year.

Mr. Murphy's opinions about the conference first were expressed in a brief three-paragraph statement released to wish news conference.
