

Editor — The President's sweeping victory can mean only one thing to many of us who backed Senator McGovern primarily for his anti - Vietnam war stand. The moral level of the electorate has sunk to an all time low. It is chilling to realize that when one sees three voters at random in this country (except a few areas such as San Francisco and Massachusetts) two of them would condone mass murder as being honorable, since the election clearly indicated acceptance of the President's mass murder policy in Vietnam. Also, it is ironic that probably these same two voters, at least in California, would demand the death penalty for a single domestic murder.
