

THE CEASE-FIRE IS SIGNED. NOW THE FIGHT BEGINS.

It's the amnesty fight that begins—and John David Herndon is one of its casualties. A Vietnam veteran who went AWOL in 1970, Herndon returned two years later and offered himself as a test case. The charge: desertion. The defense: it is not a crime to desert an army engaged in war crimes. The outcome? The army never allowed the case to reach the courts; Herndon was given a dishonorable discharge.

Russell Baker, "An important contribution to the literature on what Vietnam has done to the American soul, and I wish it could be read by everybody for its quiet presentation of reality."

James Wechsler, New York Post, "Reston's book is a moving absorbing account. A plea for sweeping general amnesty... may help to call attention to many forgotten victims of the war."

Mike Gravel, U.S. Senator from Alaska, "Regardless of what decision is finally made on the amnesty question, the American people must face and wrestle with the real facts, not the imagined ones... Reston makes us feel the emotions John Herndon felt; happiness, anger, horror and anguish."

AND HERE'S WHY SOME WENT AWOL...

This heartbreaking collection of anti-war poems by Vietnam veterans is "a test of your humanity... the chopchopchop of rotor blades... the slop of mutilated bodies. If the impact of all these poems does not make you weep, then by Jesus Christ you are not human."

—John Seelye, The New York Times Book Review
