HARLOW RETURNS TO NIXON'S STAFF

JUN 1 5 1973

Will Be Counselor in Broad Area, Warren Asserts

WASHINGTON, June 14-

President Nixon announced to-day that Bryce N. Harlow was returning to the White House staff, which was shattered by the Watergate disclosures.

Mr. Harlow, vice president of the Procter & Gamble Company, will return to his job as Counselor to the President, from which he resigned on De-cember 9, 1970, after two years of duty.

The appointment was viewed as part of the President's ef-forts to heal his relations with Congress and broaden the po-litical scope of his staff without going outside his circle of close associates.

ministration and was later a lobbyist for Procter & Gamble. Gerald L. Warren, the acting press secretary, said that Mr. Harlow would advise the President on a wide range of mat-

A Reluctant Return

When Mr. Harlow left the White House in 1970, he said that his leave of absence from White House in 1970, he said that his leave of absence from Procter & Gamble had been extended several times and he felt compelled to return. Mr. Warren said his White House service this time would also be under leave from his company. Like Melvin R. Laird, who was appointed last week as the President's chief adviser on domestic affairs, Mr. Harlow was reported to have returned reluctantly to Government service to help restore the White House operation.

His name had been proposed by Republicans in Congress and elsewhere who wanted to see more people on the White House staff with broad political experience and strong ties in Congress.

Law Violation Alleged

Representative Joh E. Moss, Democrat of California, in a long statement inserted in the Congressional Record Monday, charged that the appointment violates a Federal law saying that no active officer in the military "may hold a civil office by election or
