Some Kennedys and a Round (about) Trip to Paris

By Maxine Cheshire

Since U.S. airlines no longer feature money-saving European student-fares, a lot of young Americans are going abroad this summer via Canada, which still has bargain youth rates.

But two of Ethel Kennedy's teen-age daughters found an even cheaper way to fly directly from Washington to Paris.

Courtney, 17, and Kerry, 14 boarded a Piedmont plane at Friendship Airport last week. They thought they were bound for France by way of Montreal.

Instead, minutes later, they found themselves circling the Virginia countryside to land at Dulles Airport, which isn't far from their Hickory Hill home in McLean.

They were on the wrong airline. The Allegheny flight they had missed caused them to miss their connection in Canada.

Piedmont officials, who say they don't know who was at fault, booked the girls aboard a direct flight from Dulles to Paris the next day at no additional cost.

House and Home

Charles G. (Bebe) Rebozo will not, as the White House said in May, be reimbursing the government for $27,000 worth of improvements made by the Secret Service to the Bethesda house he had been renting to Julie and David Eisenhower.

When Rebozo sold the house two months ago to a Washington investment counselor, a Nixon family spokesman announced Rebozo's intention to repay Uncle Sam for work done to the property by the General Services Administration.

Instead, Rebozo and the purchasers, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Zirkin, have signed separate agreements with the GSA that cancel out all but $100 of the money involved.

The Zirkins paid the $100. Rebozo paid nothing.

Most of what the Zirkins got for their money isn't visible to the naked eye, except for $1,836 worth of sod and shrubbery, $395 for an underground sprinkling system and a $365 stone walkway.

Nearly $17,000 of the money spent by the government on the property at 7000 Armat Drive went for electrical work.

The government removed high-intensity lighting fixtures, but left nearly everything else, including "all boxes and conduits" and a low-level lighting system.

Nearly $5,000 was spent by the government to panel a basement command post for the Secret Service and install a bathroom.

Because the new owners did not consider some of the workmanship esthetically pleasing, part of the woodwork was torn out and the plumbing fixtures themselves were taken away by the GSA, but the basic framing and plumbing lines were left intact.

Rebozo, who paid $127,000 for the property 18 months ago, sold it for $170,000.
